Daniel Reports

By W. C. (Dan) Daniel
Virginia Fifth District Congressman

WASHINGTON - The Congress has returned for a mop-up session, and during the past four weeks your Congressman has been at work in the Fifth District. This was in no way a suspension of business, as the word recess is defined; rather it was a case of moving the operating base from Washington to Southside Virginia.

Workshops were held in Appomattox, Buckingham, Chesterfield (two), Cumberland and Powhatan Counties. I was invited to speak on eleven occasions to agricultural, business, veteran, fraternal and civic groups, and in five instances to high school government classes. I spoke at two school assemblies, and participated in the dedication of an arterial highway by-pass. Most of the speaking engagements concluded with question-and-answer sessions. I hope the other participants gained as much from these sessions as I did.

Still on the subject of schools, I learned with deep gratification while I was in the District that several elementary schools held Veterans Day observances this year. In two of these I participated. Public expressions of patriotism may be on the wane, but it is encouraging to learn that many of our school administrators and teachers recognize the need to give students the opportunity for such expressions.

In the conduct of our workshops, we found that the high cost of living, with its attendant problems, is the foremost issue facing the people of the District. Inflation shows no sign of abating, and its effects can be disastrous. Unfortunately, in all that is being written and said by elected and appointed public officials, there is nothing original by way of solution. On the other hand, it is unrealistic to expect a novel or an instant remedy. It does not exist.

Tied to inflation was concern about the continued decline in productivity, not only in this country but indeed around the world. While it is not the only cause, a large part of the problem rests on the fact that many people have lost sight of the work ethic. This does not apply in any great degree in the Fifth District, but it has its effect in the higher prices people in the area must pay for things they buy. There is a pride which comes from a day's work well done, and those who have never known this pride - or who have lost it - would do well to experience it. We will never get out of the ditch if they don't.

Several people commented on a recent CBS documentary interview with Fidel Castro. If you had spent the last 15 or so years in a cave and your opinion was based on this interview, you would have assumed that this mild-mannered highly articulate man was the essence of reason and virtue. I continue to believe no good can come from establishing trade relations with a nation whose chief export is revolution.

Also among continuing concerns is the matter of energy, and specifically gasoline supplies. I regularly receive Petroleum Situation Reports, and based on the best available projections there will be no overall shortage in the country, although there may be brief spot shortages due to delivery problems. It is conceivable mild shortages will develop again next Spring, unless conservation methods are widely adopted. Domestic drilling proceeds as rapidly as field equipment can be acquired, but progress is slow, and the building of refineries continues to lag. Everybody wants refineries, as long as they are in some other county or state. The alternative of course is importation of more Arab oil, which will cause a further deterioration in our nation's economic health. Naturally, this source remains unreliable, especially in view of continued public statements of OPEC officials that they will not hesitate to embargo shipments to us if it suits their political purposes.

A number of questions were raised about the death penalty. While no compassionate person would relish serving on a jury which might hand down such a decision, I remain convinced that there are some crimes of such a vicious nature as to demand it. An application of this penalty has declined, crimes of violence have increased. There must be a connection.

Questions were raised about numerous reports of the CIA's activities in other countries, and attempts to discredit such activities. The CIA did not invent covert political activity; rather, it came into being as a response to such publicly acknowledged activities on the part of the USSR, and later, Communist China. The agency has made mistakes - some comprehensively reported - but if in its activities it has helped to keep what is left of the non-Communist world free, and I believe it has, then it has served a worthy purpose.

Quite naturally, in an election year, the question of politics and the press came up. Several people with whom I talked had arrived at a conclusion I shared regarding electronic coverage of campaigns, and especially in the area of the so-called "in-depth" interviews. The implication is that public officials and their challengers must be Super-Saints. Certainly, we have every right to expect them to be men and women of honor, with a strong sense of justice and a commitment to high principles. But to expect infallability, and the omnipotence to usher in the Millennium, is to set the listener up for disappointment and disillusionment. The 535 men and women who sit in Congress are real people, in a real world. Saintliness is a character trait to be sought after; sanctimoniousness is the special preserve of the radical.
